Welcome Home!

A year ago, on February 23, 2002, Ed Munnich got up at the annual Baba birthday party of the Meher Baba Center of Northern California and announced to the group that the Board had been unable to recruit enough members to serve on the next year's board of directors. "We may have to disband if more of you cannot participate," Ed said in a stern voice.

Some of the long-time members were determined that the group would not perish simply from lack of participation. They believed that a permanent center was needed to inspire participation from the Northern California Baba community.

The idea of a permanent center for the Northern California group had been around a long time. Different apartments, halls and storefronts had been considered by the group, but all plans had been nipped in the bud because of various fiscal and logistical limitations.

Not long after His birthday, Baba turned the key. Harold Jamison found an appropriate site for the center. The location was a former massage parlor in El Cerrito, a quiet suburban hamlet nestled in the East Bay. When Bhau came to the Bay Area in June of 2002, the MBCNC was privileged to have him visit the potential site. Bhau gave his enthusiastic approval, and with that encouragement, the group made a commitment to go forward with the project. Harold and the core committee saw potential in the site. But first, it had to undergo major remodeling.

The main room of about a thousand square feet consisted of three concrete cubicles. A false ceiling of less than 8 feet concealed an actual 20-foot ceiling. There was a large communal shower room that was full of dry rot and mildew. Upstairs there was another shower, an old sink, three or four different floorings and lots of disreputable fixtures. There were at least three stridently different color schemes, none of them particularly well done. In addition to the shoddy condition of the physical structure, there was an odor that pervaded the entire place. Years of massage oil, sweat, mildew and other smells engulfed the visitor.

In keeping with the principle of democracy, committees carefully guided the work. Meetings were held on a weekly basis to make decisions about each phase of the project. The initial phase of construction consisted of gutting the interior. The most difficult part was removing the carpet, which had been glued to the floor with some space-age material that resisted all attempts to remove it. During the gutting there were, fortunately, only a few accidents. The most notable being Ron Greenstein's breaking his arm.

After the gutting was finished, new electrical outlets were installed. The electricians discovered that the electricity had been run through a tap to the neighbor's electrical system and that the phone line was also tapped into one of the neighbor's lines. It was also discovered that the previous occupants had run ventilation to the inside of the walls rather than to the outside.

Pergo faux wood flooring was installed on the main floor and wall-to-wall carpeting was laid upstairs. Some 80 pounds of spackle was applied to the walls for texturing. Peter Ravazza volunteered to undertake the paint job, with the help of Dan Stone and Kathy Wiederhold. Using his own unique touch and technique he created a palate of colors. The final result is a wonderful and light interplay of soft tones, perfectly accentuating the intended mood of the center. Playfully painted on one of the walls is a translucent image of Baba's face.

Approximately 50 different people helped with the different phases of the construction, and design. In addition to those who did the physical work, there has been an equal number of Baba Lovers who have contributed money. Eventually we will need $1,500 per month for the rent and have received pledges that cover about two thirds of this.

The center looked beautifully festive for its dedication on the annual celebration of Baba's birthday. A delightful and whimsical window dressing, created by Lisa Greenstein and Pam Johnson, turned the store-front window into a three-dimensional birthday card for Baba. Bridget Robinson created a stunning gold colophon, Meher Baba's Mastery in Servitude emblem, which adorns the glass front door.

Baba's birthday was celebrated on Feb 23. Honored guests were Bea Dimpfl and Herman Alvarado, who spent time with Baba in the 1950s and early 60s. We were also treated to a lovely harp concert by Judith Shotwell and enjoyed our local talent including David Miotke, Ron Greenstein, Raine Eastman Gannett, Karen Sterkin, Gay Dunn and Cindy Lowe.

Betty Lowman and Annie Stovall coordinated children's activities, including crafts, balloons and garland-making. Vern Stovall and the Drygas's created a beautiful stage, and Fred and Janet White held forth in the kitchen.

A short ceremony was held and the group awarded the Golden Hammer award to John Richards and Roger Larsen and the Golden Paint Brush Award to Peter Ravazza and Kathy Wiederhold for work above and beyond the call of duty. Then, after a short introduction on the history of the group by Robert Dreyfuss, the Meher Baba Center of Northern California was dedicated and sealed with a recitation of the three prayers and a loud chorus of Avatar Meher Baba Ki Jai.
